

The meeting went well, and because I was given creative freedom over the site, I did not have to make too many changes to my idea. The main changes I needed to make were to split the gallery of crafts into sections based on category, which will be easy enough. Originally, I was just planning to have one gallery, but I had to change it to be based on whether the craft is a card, papercraft, ink flower, ink tile, shadow box, or misc crafts. I also had to change the color schema from whimsical to more country rustic colors, which again is an easy change, as no dev work has been started. By making these changes, I am adhering to my client's wishes, as this is their site and these are very reasonable updates that align with my client's vision of what their site should look like.